The Center for Teaching and Learning invites faculty to participate in a hands-on Active Learning Institute: Flipped Classrooms and Beyond to transform their undergraduate and graduate-level courses into an environment for participatory and engaged learning. This intensive workshop introduces the key components of course redesign to increase active learning and can also help prepare instructors to flip their courses.

The Institute is open to Columbia faculty and designated graduate teaching assistants.

Participants will continue to receive guidance and consultations from CTL staff beyond the Institute.

Learn

Specific topics will include:
- Learning Objectives and Syllabus Development
- “Behind the Scenes” of Planning for Active Learning
- Facilitating Individual and Collaborative Learning Activities
- Planning and Creating Effective Online Materials
- Evaluating Learning and Assessing Impact
- Creating Community in the Classroom

Create

Instructors will leave the Institute having created:
- A redesigned, learner-centered syllabus
- Drafts of pre-class and in-class activities or assignments for a single class session
- Sample online materials, such as videos or podcasts
- A timeline for planning, developing, and assessing the impact of their course
